Hospitality News:

Cask & Larder to open eatery in Orlando airport

Orlando Business Journal

Megan Ribbens

Chef James and Julie Petrakis have been busy this year, opening Swine & Sons Provisions and teaming up for the new Dove Coat concept in downtown Orlando, and now the duo has plans to expand their brand to the 62 million visitors who travel to the City Beautiful.

The James Beard Award-nominated chefs announced Oct. 9 they will open a new location of their award-winning Cask & Larder concept in summer 2016 at the Orlando International Airport. The eatery will open in partnership with Johnny Rivers, a former Disney corporate executive chef and Culinary Olympics gold medal recipient, and Peter Amaro Jr., president and COO of Master Concession Air.

The restaurant will be in Terminal 2 — which houses gates for the airport's largest commercial carrier, Southwest Airlines — and will replace the space currently occupied by Au Bon Pain and Café Kalik. Cask & Larder will serve breakfast, lunch and dinner seven days a week, and the space will feature a dining room, bar and grab-and-go market with sit-down service for approximately 390 guests.

Cask & Larder also will be the airport's first restaurant specializing in seasonally driven dishes and locally sourced ingredients.

"We're really excited to bring Cask & Larder to the Orlando International Airport," said James Petrakis in a prepared statement. "Julie and I both grew up here and have long thought it would be great to have more local establishments represented at the airport. With Orlando being such a popular international destination, we look forward to showcasing modern Florida cuisine made from locally sourced ingredients to the millions of visitors the airport attracts each year."

While the new Cask & Larder location will feature many crossover menu items such as Nashville Hot Chicken and Roasted Oysters, certain adaptations to the menu and service will be made to meet the airport's needs and to offer something for all types of travelers. The restaurant also will serve craft cocktails and will open on the CFHLA Website.

This auction will feature numerous items including stay-cations, golf, and more!
